Installation of 14 Million Feet of Electrical and Fiber Optic Cable Completed on Ford

Shipbuilders recently completed the installation of more than 14 million feet of electrical and fiber optic cable on the aircraft carrier Gerald R. Ford (CVN 78) – enough to reach from Earth to the International Space Station more than 10 times. The millions of feet of cable make up the carrier’s electrical distribution system, which provides the ship with over 250 percent more electrical capacity than previous carriers.

Ford’s design makes a significant leap to electrical power. With more than 10 million feet of electrical cable and 4 million of fiber optic cable, the ship’s electrical power replaces several legacy steam-powered systems onboard and brings extra electrical capacity to the ship for future technologies.

“Ford’s increased electrical capacity makes this ship unique,” said Rolf Bartschi, vice president of CVN 78 carrier construction. “The Ford-class aircraft carrier establishes the most capable, lethal and flexible platform for the Navy to incorporate the latest technologies. This platform equips the warfighter with the best weaponry, communications and operating systems that our nation has today...”

Bagley Speaks at Ingalls During MLK Day Celebration

Ray Bagley, vice president of Trades Operations, spoke to Ingalls shipbuilders on Monday, Jan. 18 in honor of Martin Luther King Day. During his remarks, Bagley spoke about Newport News Shipbuilding’s Inclusion and Diversity Campaign that kicked off earlier this month.

“At NNS, we are in the midst of an educational and awareness campaign about the importance of being inclusive and diverse,” he said. “To understand what it means to be inclusive, we have to also understand the biases that may cause us to exclude people – even when we don’t consciously know we are doing it.”

Bagley added, “If we are ever going to address the issue and really make a change, we must confront it head on. I believe the first step is to have open and honest conversations about it.”

At the end of his remarks, Bagley challenged the audience to make a difference. “As you leave here today, I ask that you stand as examples for the rest of the workforce. Help us to set the tone for how we run the business, how we treat one another, and how inclusive we are to different points of view. And when you see someone not being inclusive and open – speak up.”

NNS Shipbuilder Serves as Commencement Speaker for NC State University Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering

Brandi Smith (E20) was the December commencement speaker for the North Carolina State University Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering Department. Smith graduated from North Carolina State University in 2002 with a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering. ... Electrical systems take less manpower to operate and maintain, so in terms of costs, the shift toward electrical not only improves the flexibility of the ship's technologies, it also reduces operating and maintenance costs during the carrier's 50-year service life," said Bartschi. ## Proteus Takes Part in Simulated Mission in Test Tank

In the photo above, Proteus is running a 30-day simulated mission in the test tank at Undersea Solutions Group to develop reliability data. Data collected will support design of Unmanned Undersea Vehicles (UUVs) for long duration missions in the future. UUVs that are able to remain at sea and execute missions with greater range and persistence than currently used small vehicles, will be important for achieving the Navy's goal of using these vehicles as force multipliers in the undersea battle space of the future. USG is using the Proteus vehicle as a means of generating reliability data and testing new technologies that will form the basis of future designs. Photo credit: Undersea Solutions Group

Father and Son Shipbuilders Graduate from ODU

Newport News Shipbuilding employees

Thomas Hammock Jr., systems test engineer, and Thomas Hammock III, computer systems security analyst, graduated from Old Dominion University during commencement exercises, held Dec. 12, 2015. Hammock Jr. was presented with a PhD in mechanical engineering and Hammock III with a degree in computer engineering and electrical engineering.

“It’s not too often that a father and son get the opportunity to attend the same university at the same time and graduate on the same date during the same graduation ceremony,” said Hammock Jr.

Hammock III said, “It felt good to be able to relate through school and know that we were going through similar things. We often texted or called each other to talk about assignments and to keep each other on track.”

Both Hammock’s agree that the significance of attending the same university didn’t fully register until they landed in the same room on commencement day, crossing the same platform to receive their degrees.

“The best part about graduating at the same time as my son was having a front row seat to see my son receive his degree,” said Hammock Jr. “In today’s changing world, continued education on the job and outside of work better serves your employer and the company’s customer. I want to thank my professor Dr. Han Bao and the people at Newport News Shipbuilding for their example, encouragement and motivational support. I could not have completed the program without their help.”
