The Virginia-Class Submarine (VCS) Program recently completed the Auxiliary Machinery Room (AMR) module for Vermont (SSN 792). This is the first fully-outfitted module of the Block IV contract.

A team of Newport News Shipbuilding trades employees build all the AMR modules for both NNS and Electric Boat submarines in the Covered Modular Assembly Facility (CMAF).

“Our craftsmen and craftswomen take great pride in meeting the challenging schedules for these complex modules,” said Foreman Jeff Bailey (O22). “Once again, we had effective teamwork among the different crews outfitting the AMR across all three shifts. And the team continues to build a strong reputation for safety and quality.”

This was the 19th VCS AMR module that NNS has built, and all of them have been delivered on schedule.

“I am extremely proud of the CMAF team for achieving this principal event for the program and for the Navy. Outstanding craftsmen and craftswomen from all trades completed precision work while achieving best-ever safety results,” said Matt Needy, vice president of the Virginia-Class Submarine Program and Fleet Services.

The completion of the habitability module for Vermont (SSN 792) is next for the Virginia-Class Submarine Block IV contract. This is the largest module that the CMAF builds.
