The vaccine is just a thing to do to keep everybody else safe, to keep myself safe, obviously, but also just so that I don't spread, COVID to others. So, my husband, he works in the shipyard, too, and he actually got vaccinated today.

We have a daughter who still lives in our home and us getting vaccinated would help protect her because my husband and I are still working. And so, I wouldn't want to bring something home that could possibly make her sick. I have a sister with disabilities that I care for, that I also would not want to expose to illness. And the company is doing what it can to make it as easy a process as possible.

There wasn't any confusion over what needed to happen. Once we were here, there's lots of signs. The queues are self-explanatory, and then there are people all along the way to tell you where you need to go and what you need to be doing.

So, I got the vaccine because I just felt like it was important to do in order to keep my family safe and others around me safe. I don't really think that there's anything to be afraid of.
